Animal By-Products

We hear this catch phrase all the time, "Animal By-Products", but who really knows what they are and where they come from? It is a nasty little secret that the cosmetic companies DON'T want you to know. In his book, "Mad Cowboy", Howard F. Lyman writes:

"I am a fourth generation dairy farmer and cattle rancher. I grew up on a dairy farm in Montana and I ran a feedlot operation there for twenty years. I know firsthand how cattle are raised and are produced in this country.

When a cow is slaughtered, about half of it by weight is not eaten by humans: the intestines and their contents, the head, hooves, and horns, as well as bones and blood. These are dumped into giant grinders at rendering plants, as are the entire bodies of cows and other farm animals known to be diseased. There is simply no such thing in America as an animal too ravaged by disease, too cancerous, or too putrid to not be welcomed into the embracing arms of the renderer. Another staple of the renderer's diet, in addition to farm animals are euthanized pets -- the six or seven million dogs and cats killed in animal shelters every year. Added to the blend are the euthanized catch of animal control agencies and road kill. (Road-kill is not collected daily, and in the summer, the better road kill collection crews can generally smell it before they can see it.) When this gruesome mix is ground and steam cooked, the lighter, fatty material floating to the top are refined for use in such products as cosmetics, lubricants, candles, and waxes."

The fat in a lot of lipstick comes from the rendering process -- where they actually take dead animals, render the mixture down, take the fat off of it, and use it in beauty aids.
